Since 1876, Legal Aid Has Served as New York's Primary Public Defender and Civil Legal Services Provider for Low-Income Communities

Landmark Anniversary to be Honored with a New Exhibit at The New York Historical and a Year of Citywide Celebrations

(NEW YORK, NY) — The Legal Aid Society received a proclamation from New York City Mayor Zohran Mamdani celebrating the organization's 150th anniversary. This milestone proudly marks 150 years of protecting, defending, and advancing the rights of New Yorkers — a historic achievement for the nation's oldest and largest public defense and civil legal services organization.

Since its founding in 1876, Legal Aid has served as the city's premier nonprofit law firm and a pillar of justice in New York City. The organization represents immigrants seeking safety, safeguards children and reunites families, protects people's homes and livelihoods, and defends individuals accused of crimes who cannot afford to hire an attorney.

For a century and a half, Legal Aid has stood on the front lines of the city's most defining struggles for fairness and dignity — shaping laws, influencing public policy, and expanding access to justice for generations of vulnerable communities. The 150th anniversary theme, "Reimagine Justice," honors this historic legacy while boldly charting the future of justice in New York.

"We are deeply honored to receive this proclamation from Mayor Mamdani recognizing The Legal Aid Society's 150 years of service to New Yorkers," said Twyla Carter, Attorney-in-Chief and Chief Executive Office of The Legal Aid Society. "For a century and a half, we have stood alongside immigrants, families, tenants, and individuals who cannot afford to hire private counsel — fighting to ensure that justice is a right, not a privilege. As we mark this milestone, we recommit to advancing dignity, equity, and access to justice for the communities we serve. We thank the Mayor Mamdani for this meaningful recognition.”

A Landmark Exhibit Honoring a Legacy of Justice

To commemorate this milestone, The New York Historical will host an exhibit, “Delivering Justice: 150 Years of The Legal Aid Society,” starting March 6 through July 5, 2026. The exhibit traces how Legal Aid’s work has helped shape New York City’s legal and social landscape, featuring never-before-seen photographs, press clippings, and original documents spanning from 1876 through the present day.

Drawing from rare archival materials and historical objects, the exhibit explores Legal Aid’s lasting impact across immigration, housing, policing, juvenile and prisoners’ rights, and civil legal advocacy. It highlights the organization’s enduring role as a first responder to injustice in New York City for 150 years.

The exhibit will also feature original works by contemporary artist Josh MacPhee alongside art created by young clients of The Legal Aid Society, in dialogue with reproduced works by Ben Shahn, Romare Bearden, Arnold de Mille, and Jacob Lawrence — underscoring the deep connection between art, justice, and social change.

On March 18, in connection with the exhibit, The New York Historical will also host a special panel discussion exploring the evolution of legal and justice issues in New York City dating back to the late 1800s. Panelists — including current Corporation Counsel and former Legal Aid Attorney-in-Chief and CEO, Steven Banks; Legal Aid’s current Attorney-in-Chief and CEO, Twyla Carter; and Bekah Friedman, historian and Legal Aid expert — will explore New York City’s history and how past legal battles still shape today’s fights for fairness and accountability.

A Year of Community Celebration

The 150th anniversary will also be celebrated citywide through a series of “Community Joy” events in every borough. Legal Aid will partner with beloved cultural institutions and community partners, including BRIC Arts Media, Brooklyn Org, Brooklyn Book Bodega, El Museo del Barrio, the Queens Museum, Rooftop Films, Snug Harbor, and others to build community resilience and strengthen community connections, while honoring the people at the heart of its mission.

The organization will also launch a dynamic public awareness campaign across the MTA system, featuring the voices and stories of Legal Aid staff, advocates, and the people and communities we serve.

Background

Founded in 1876 as the German Legal Aid Society, the organization began as the nation’s first legal office dedicated to serving low-income individuals who otherwise had no access to a lawyer. In its first year, Legal Aid handled 212 cases, primarily assisting German immigrants in New York City — laying the foundation for what would become an enduring movement for equal justice.

As New York City grew and evolved, so did The Legal Aid Society. For 150 years, the organization has adapted to serve new communities while driving systemic reforms to meet the changing needs of low-income New Yorkers.

Today, Legal Aid’s work benefits more than 2 million low-income individuals, families, and households across the five boroughs facing challenges related to the criminal, civil, and juvenile legal systems, housing instability, immigration, employment, healthcare, education, government benefits, and more every year.

Through impact litigation, direct representation, and policy advocacy, The Legal Aid Society fights not only for impacted people, but also for lasting structural change that expands rights, protections, and opportunities for all New Yorkers.

From its defense of incarcerated people during the Attica Uprising, to its role in the landmark Willowbrook State School litigation, to decades of advocacy for unhoused families and people detained at Rikers Island, Legal Aid’s history is deeply intertwined with the defining civil rights struggles of New York City.

For 150 years — and counting — The Legal Aid Society has been, and remains, a powerful force for justice.
